Dear Department,

In our letter 1960/2/56 of June 20th, 1956 we reported the exceptional treatment given by the Chinese to the Egyptian National Day last year.

2. For this year's celebrations the Chinese again made a considerable show of Sino-Egyptian friendship. The People's Daily of June 18 published a front page editorial entitled "The glorious four years of the Egyptian people". Editorials of this kind are usually only produced for Soviet bloc countries, the editorial on Egypt last year being the sole exception.

3. The main surprise of last year's celebration was Mao's attendance at the Egyptian reception. This year he did not attend (and nor of course did any of us) but a large number of high-powered Chinese did, including Chu Teh and Chou En-lai. The speeches were along expected lines as regards Sino-Egyptian relations but showed an interesting difference of approach, when referring to the Middle East. Chu Teh in his speech dwelt on the aggressive designs of the American imperialists while the Egyptian Ambassador contented himself with abusing the French and ourselves.

Yours ever,

Chancery.
